

HILLARY'S MOUTH: An open-and-shut case

REGARDLESS of political party and philosophy, most Americans agree that the President of the United States, our Commander in Chief, should control his or her words—that is, should not be an ill-tempered, foul-mouthed, hateful, abusive, profane or irrationally defiant person. Think of the long line of America's elected chief executives, including such sober and iconic figures as George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, Teddy Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, and Ronald Reagan.

Then, think of Hillary Clinton . . .

Here is a documented assortment of unexpurgated utterances from the Illinoisan / Arkansan / New Yorker who aspires to be the first woman (but not lady) President of our nation:
